1 Arbitration Agreements

1.1 What, if any, are the legal requirements of an arbitration agreement under the laws of Austria?

Pursuant to §581(1) Austrian Code of Civil Procedure (“ACCP”) an arbitration agreement requires at least the exact designation of the parties to the arbitration agreement, the specific legal relationship to which the arbitration agreement pertains and the parties’ unambiguous consent to have all or certain disputes which have arisen or which may arise between them in respect of a defined legal relationship, whether contractual or not, resolved by arbitration. The arbitration agreement may be concluded as a separate agreement or a clause within a contract. The subject matter has to be arbitrable.

The formal requirements are addressed in §583(1) ACCP, according to which an arbitration agreement must be in writing and contained either in a written document signed by the parties or in letters, telefax, emails or other forms of communication exchanged between the parties which preserve evidence of the agreement. An arbitration agreement may also be part of general terms and conditions, provided that the contract referring to these terms is validly executed. It is not necessary to attach the general terms and conditions to the main contract.

Special provisions apply to arbitration agreements with consumers. Pursuant to §617(1) and (2) ACCP, arbitration agreements between an entrepreneur and a consumer may only be validly concluded for disputes that have already arisen. Further, the arbitration agreement must be contained in a document which is personally signed by the consumer and does not contain any agreements other than those relating to the arbitral proceedings. The latter also applies to arbitral proceedings in labour law matters.

1.2 What other elements ought to be incorporated in an arbitration agreement?

Elements that are advisable to be incorporated in an arbitration agreement are the determination of the place of arbitration, the language of the proceedings, the number of arbitrators, the manner of their appointment, the applicable arbitration rules and the substantive law applicable to the dispute and the arbitration agreement.

1.3 What has been the approach of the national courts to the enforcement of arbitration agreements?

In general, Austrian courts have a positive approach towards arbitration agreements. Austrian courts apply interpretations that uphold the validity of arbitration agreements, provided that the formal and minimum content requirements have been met.

The pendency of arbitral proceedings bars the commencement of parallel court proceedings. The pendency of an action before an arbitral tribunal results in the inadmissibility of subsequent proceedings concerning the same dispute (“lis pendens”). If court proceedings are commenced in a dispute that is subject to an arbitration agreement, the courts must dismiss the claim if it relates to a matter which is subject to an arbitration agreement unless the respondent enters into the merits of the dispute without raising objections to this effect or the court establishes that the arbitration agreement is invalid or unenforceable.

2 Governing Legislation

2.1 What legislation governs the enforcement of arbitration proceedings in Austria?

In Austria, arbitration proceedings are governed by §§577 to 618 ACCP. The legislation is based on the UNCITRAL Model Law and was amended most recently in 2013.

2.2 Does the same arbitration law govern both domestic and international arbitration proceedings? If not, how do they differ?

The same provisions apply to domestic and international arbitration proceedings.

2.3 Is the law governing international arbitration based on the UNCITRAL Model Law? Are there significant differences between the two?

Austrian arbitration law conforms with the UNCITRAL Model Law to a large extent. The most significant difference is that pursuant to §611(2) 5 ACCP, an award may only be set aside, if the arbitral procedure was not in accordance with Austrian public policy (procedural ordre public). The accordance of the arbitral procedure with the agreement of the parties, as required by Article 34(2)(a)(iv), second case of the UNCITRAL Model Law, is not required under Austrian law.

2.4 To what extent are there mandatory rules governing international arbitration proceedings sited in Austria?

The ACCP contains only a few mandatory provisions, e.g. the principle of equal treatment, the parties' rights to representation and to be heard, the rules on objective arbitrability, the option of applying to state courts for interim measures, the possibility of challenging an arbitrator before national courts and the provisions on actions for setting aside an award.

3 Jurisdiction

3.1 Are there any subject matters that may not be referred to arbitration under the governing law of Austria? What is the general approach used in determining whether or not a dispute is "arbitrable"?

Any claim involving an economic interest may be arbitrable. A dispute relating to a non-proprietary claim is arbitrable if the parties could enter into a settlement on the subject matter in dispute. Claims in family law, tenancy law and matters concerning social security are not arbitrable.

3.2 Is an arbitrator permitted to rule on the question of his or her own jurisdiction?

Pursuant to §592(1) ACCP, an arbitrator is permitted to rule on his or her own jurisdiction in the final award or in a separate award (doctrine of competence-competence).

3.3 What is the approach of the national courts in Austria towards a party who commences court proceedings in apparent breach of an arbitration agreement?

The court has to dismiss a claim if it relates to a matter which is subject to an arbitration agreement, unless the respondent makes submissions on the merits of the dispute or orally pleads before the court without raising objections to this effect or the court establishes that the arbitration agreement is invalid or unenforceable.

3.4 Under what circumstances can a court address the issue of the jurisdiction and competence of the national arbitral tribunal? What is the standard of review in respect of a tribunal's decision as to its own jurisdiction?

The court may notify the parties before the start of hearings of its view that the case is subject to arbitration and dismiss the action in limine litis.

An arbitral tribunal's decision on jurisdiction may be challenged and, thus, can be subject to national court review. The challenge of an award on jurisdiction does not prevent an arbitral tribunal from continuing arbitral proceedings or from rendering a final award.

3.5 Under what, if any, circumstances does the national law of Austria allow an arbitral tribunal to assume jurisdiction over individuals or entities which are not themselves party to an agreement to arbitrate?

The extension of an arbitration agreement's scope to third parties is viewed conservatively by the Austrian courts, as well as legal writers. There are no express provisions on the extension of an arbitration agreement's scope to non-signatories. In general, only the parties to the arbitration agreement are bound by that agreement. As a consequence, concepts such as "groups of company doctrine", "piercing of the corporate veil" or representation and agency generally do not apply. However, the Austrian Supreme Court consistently rules that legal successors, as well as third party beneficiaries, are also bound by an arbitration agreement.

3.6 What laws or rules prescribe limitation periods for the commencement of arbitrations in Austria and what is the typical length of such periods? Do the national courts of Austria consider such rules procedural or substantive, i.e., what choice of law rules govern the application of limitation periods?

Austrian laws or rules do not prescribe any limitation periods for the commencement of arbitration. Pursuant to §584(4) ACCP, when an arbitral tribunal or a court denies its jurisdiction over a dispute, or where an arbitral award is set aside due to the arbitral tribunal's lack of jurisdiction, the proceedings are considered to be properly continued ("gehörig fortgesetzt") if the claimant immediately files its claims with the competent court or arbitral tribunal. This ensures continuous suspension of the limitation period under Austrian law.

Limitation periods are governed by the applicable substantive law in Austria. The typical length of such limitation periods is either three or thirty years, depending on the nature of the claim.

3.7 What is the effect in Austria of pending insolvency proceedings affecting one or more of the parties to ongoing arbitration proceedings?

Pursuant to the Austrian Insolvency Act, all pending proceedings in which the debtor is either a claimant or respondent are interrupted by virtue of the commencement of insolvency proceedings. This rule also applies to arbitration proceedings which have their seat in Austria.

4 Choice of Law Rules

4.1 How is the law applicable to the substance of a dispute determined?

The law applicable to the substance of a dispute shall be determined by the parties. Pursuant to §603 ACCP the arbitral tribunal has to decide the dispute in accordance with the provisions of law as chosen by the parties. Unless the parties have explicitly agreed otherwise, an agreement on the law of a given state shall be construed as directly referring to the substantive law of that state and not to its conflict rules. Only in the absence of any designation by the parties does the arbitral tribunal have full discretion to determine the law which it considers to be appropriate, without having to resort to specific conflict-of-laws rules.

4.2 In what circumstances will mandatory laws (of the seat or of another jurisdiction) prevail over the law chosen by the parties?

The parties' autonomy to determine the applicable law is limited by mandatory laws, for example, if so required by the principle of the protection of the weaker party, e.g. in consumer law or employment law. The Austrian public policy (ordre public) also prevails over the law chosen by the parties.

4.3 What choice of law rules govern the formation, validity, and legality of arbitration agreements?

In view of recognition and enforcement, Article V(1)(a) of the New York Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (“NYC”) applies, providing for the application of the law chosen by the parties or, lacking such agreement, the law of the country where the award was made. Austrian arbitration law does not explicitly regulate this matter. Lacking agreement between the parties, the laws of the place of arbitration shall be applied.

5 Selection of Arbitral Tribunal

5.1 Are there any limits to the parties’ autonomy to select arbitrators?

The parties’ autonomy to select arbitrators is limited to the extent that an arbitrator may be challenged if there are circumstances that give rise to justified doubts as to his impartiality or independence or if he or she lacks qualifications agreed upon by the parties. An arbitral tribunal which has its seat in Austria must be composed of an uneven number of arbitrators (§586 ACCP).

5.2 If the parties’ chosen method for selecting arbitrators fails, is there a default procedure?

§587 ACCP provides for a default procedure if the parties’ chosen method for selecting arbitrators fails or does not exist at all. If the parties agreed upon arbitration proceedings with a sole arbitrator and if the parties fail to agree on the arbitrator within four weeks of receipt of a request to do so from the other party, the arbitrator shall be appointed by the court upon application by a party. If no nomination procedure was agreed upon for a three arbitrator tribunal, each party shall appoint one arbitrator, and thereafter the two appointed arbitrators shall appoint a third arbitrator as chairman. If more than three arbitrators have been provided for, each party shall appoint the same number of arbitrators and the arbitrators thus appointed shall appoint a further arbitrator as chairman.

Any party may apply to a court for substituting an appointment of an arbitrator if the party-agreed appointment procedure has failed, i.e. one party does not act in accordance with the agreed procedure, or the parties are unable to reach an agreement as to the joint appointment of an arbitrator, or a third party does not fulfil its role in the appointment of an arbitrator.

Austrian arbitration law provides for a mandatory subsidiary catch-all provision in §587(6) ACCP, which covers all cases not expressly mentioned in the law, in which a party does not appoint an arbitrator within four weeks after receipt of a written request to do so, and in which any agreed substitute procedure does not lead to the appointment of an arbitrator within a reasonable period of time.

5.3 Can a court intervene in the selection of arbitrators? If so, how?

The court may only intervene in the selection of arbitrators upon application by a party to the arbitration agreement. §587(3) ACCP provides for a party’s right to request a court to appoint the missing arbitrator(s) if the part-agreed appointment procedure has failed.

Pursuant to §589(3) ACCP the courts may also be requested by a party to decide on the challenge of arbitrators if a challenge under a party-agreed procedure or under the procedure set forth in §589(2) ACCP is not successful. This competence is mandatory and applies as an additional instance of review even in cases where an arbitral institution decides on challenges raised by the parties.

5.4 What are the requirements (if any) as to arbitrator independence, neutrality and/or impartiality and for disclosure of potential conflicts of interest for arbitrators imposed by law or issued by arbitration institutions within Austria?

Pursuant to §588 ACCP, an arbitrator must disclose any circumstances which could raise doubts as to his or her impartiality and/or independence, or which are in conflict with the agreement of the parties at any stage of the arbitral proceedings. Independence is defined by the absence of close financial or other ties between the arbitrator and the parties. Impartiality is closely related to independence, but refers to the arbitrators’ attitude. However, an arbitrator may be successfully challenged if there is objectively justified doubt as to his or her impartiality or independence.

6 Procedural Rules

6.1 Are there laws or rules governing the procedure of arbitration in Austria? If so, do those laws or rules apply to all arbitral proceedings sited in Austria?

The procedure of arbitration in Austria is governed by §§577 et seq. ACCP. These provisions apply to all arbitral proceedings that have their seat in Austria. Subject to mandatory requirements, the parties are free to derogate from most of the procedural rules.

6.2 In arbitration proceedings conducted in Austria, are there any particular procedural steps that are required by law?

There are no particular procedural steps required by the ACCP. Arbitration proceedings must meet fundamental procedural rights such as fair and equal treatment, proper representation and the right to be heard. The respondent’s right to submit a memorandum in reply is considered such a mandatory procedural step.

Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the arbitral tribunal shall decide on whether to hold oral hearings or to conduct the proceedings in writing. Upon a party’s request, the arbitral tribunal shall hold oral hearings at an appropriate stage of the proceedings, unless the parties have agreed that no oral hearings shall be held. In any case, pursuant to §599(2) ACCP, the arbitral tribunal has to notify the parties in a timely manner of any hearings or any meetings for taking evidence. The latter is mandatory.

6.3 Are there any particular rules that govern the conduct of counsel from Austria in arbitral proceedings sited in Austria? If so: (i) do those same rules also govern the conduct of counsel from Austria in arbitral proceedings sited elsewhere; and (ii) do those same rules also govern the conduct of counsel from countries other than Austria in arbitral proceedings sited in Austria?

There are no specific rules that govern the conduct of counsels from Austria in arbitral proceedings that have their seat in Austria. However, Austrian counsels admitted to the Austrian bar are bound by the Austrian Attorney’s Act (Rechtsanwaltsordnung) that sets forth the core principles for the exercise of the profession as a lawyer, such as the obligation to confidentiality and integrity towards the client, the prohibition of dual representation etc. Further, Austrian counsels shall refrain from creating the appearance to influence witnesses and are not entitled to agree on fee arrangements containing a quota litis, i.e. contingency fees.

6.4 What powers and duties does the national law of Austria impose upon arbitrators?

The main obligation of the arbitrators is to conduct the arbitral procedure in accordance with the parties' agreement and the principles of a fair trial, including the duty of neutrality. Upon a plea, the arbitrators may decide on their own jurisdiction. During the proceedings, the arbitrators have the power to decide on the admissibility of evidence, to take such evidence and to determine its relevance, materiality and weight unrestrictedly. The arbitrators thus have wide discretion on the conduct of the proceedings. Finally, arbitrators have the right to render interim or protective measures upon either party's request.

The most significant duties of the arbitrators are to conduct the arbitral procedure efficiently and be cost-effective in accordance with the parties' agreement and ultimately render an award with final and binding effect. Arbitrators must promptly disclose any circumstances likely to raise doubts as to his or her impartiality or independence at any stage of the arbitration proceedings.

The main powers bestowed upon the arbitrators are the rendering of arbitral awards with final and binding effect, including a decision on the tribunal's own jurisdiction, as well as the discretion to conduct the proceedings in all questions not regulated by the law or by virtue of the parties' agreement. Arbitrators have the power to render interim measures. Arbitrators lack coercive powers. As such, arbitrators cannot compel witnesses or parties to produce particular documents, to give testimony or even to appear at an oral hearing. Further, arbitrators cannot administer oaths, requiring them to request state court assistance in case an examination under oath is required.

6.5 Are there rules restricting the appearance of lawyers from other jurisdictions in legal matters in Austria and, if so, is it clear that such restrictions do not apply to arbitration proceedings sited in Austria?

In Austria the appearance of lawyers, including lawyers from other jurisdictions, in legal matters is strictly regulated. The rules of representation applicable to national court proceedings do not apply to arbitration proceedings sited in Austria and representation in arbitration proceedings is, unlike national court proceedings, not reserved to lawyers.

6.6 To what extent are there laws or rules in Austria providing for arbitrator immunity?

Austrian law does not provide for arbitrator immunity. Pursuant to §594 ACCP, arbitrators are liable for any damage caused by their culpable refusal or delay in fulfilling the duty assumed by acceptance of the appointment, e.g. if they do not render the arbitral award in a timely manner or unjustifiably resign from their function. For any liability going beyond the ambit of §594 ACCP, the Austrian Supreme Court has repeatedly held that any such liability requires a successful challenge of the arbitral award in order to even be considered.

6.7 Do the national courts have jurisdiction to deal with procedural issues arising during an arbitration?

National courts may only deal with procedural issues arising during arbitration proceedings if so provided for in §§ 577 et seq. ACCP, e.g. the appointment or challenge of arbitrators. Arbitrators or any party with the approval of the arbitrators may request national courts to perform judicial acts for which the arbitrators do not have authority, including the request to a foreign court or other authority to carry out such acts, e.g. assisting in the taking of evidence. In addition to the arbitrators' power to issue interim measures, national courts remain competent to grant interim measures of protection even though the parties have entered into an arbitration agreement.

7 Preliminary Relief and Interim Measures

7.1 Is an arbitrator in Austria permitted to award preliminary or interim relief? If so, what types of relief? Must an arbitrator seek the assistance of a court to do so?

Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, arbitrators may, upon request of a party and after hearing the other party, order interim or protective measures. Such measures may only be ordered if the enforcement of a claim would otherwise be frustrated or materially hampered, or there would be a danger of irreparable damage. Interim or protective measures are only of a preliminary nature and no awards. The issuance of ex parte measures is explicitly forbidden. Austrian law does not provide for a numerous clausus of such interim or protective measures. Thus, arbitral tribunals are also free to issue measures which are unknown to Austrian law. Arbitrators do not have to seek the assistance of a court for issuance of preliminary measures.

Interim or protective measures are enforceable by Austrian courts upon request of a party.

7.2 Is a court entitled to grant preliminary or interim relief in proceedings subject to arbitration? In what circumstances? Can a party's request to a court for relief have any effect on the jurisdiction of the arbitration tribunal?

Pursuant to §585 ACCP, an arbitration agreement does not deprive a party of its right to request interim relief from the courts. Upon request by a party before or during arbitration proceedings, courts are entitled to grant interim measures of protection even though the parties have entered into an arbitration agreement. This provision brings the side-by-side power of granting interim measures of national courts and arbitrators. However, the principle that no legal action can be instituted twice for the same cause of action has to be considered.

Preliminary measures either granted by arbitrators or courts shall not prejudice the final outcome of the arbitration proceedings.

7.3 In practice, what is the approach of the national courts to requests for interim relief by parties to arbitration agreements?

Austrian courts have repeatedly granted interim measures related to arbitration.

7.4 Under what circumstances will a national court of Austria issue an anti-suit injunction in aid of an arbitration?

Austrian law does not provide for anti-suit injunctions either by an arbitral tribunal or by a domestic court.

7.5 Does the national law allow for the national court and/or arbitral tribunal to order security for costs?

Austrian law allows for the national court to order security for costs, whereby in certain cases national courts have to order security for costs. Austrian arbitration law does not explicitly provide for the right or duty of arbitral tribunals to order security for costs. In practice, it is common that the arbitral tribunal may require any party to provide appropriate security in connection with an interim or protective measure, as well as with an award.

8 Evidentiary Matters

8.1 What rules of evidence (if any) apply to arbitral proceedings in Austria?

Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the arbitral tribunal is free to determine the rules of evidence. Pursuant to §599 ACCP the arbitral tribunal has the power to decide on the admissibility of evidence, to take such evidence and to determine its relevance, materiality and weight unrestrictedly.

8.2 Are there limits on the scope of an arbitrator's authority to order the disclosure of documents and other disclosure (including third party disclosure)?

The disclosure of documents and other disclosures are not regulated with regard to arbitration. In general, the parties are free to agree on a certain disclosure policy. Even without such an agreement, arbitral tribunals seated in Austria have repeatedly ordered the production of documents, often relying on what they consider to be best practice in international arbitration.

8.3 Under what circumstances, if any, is a court able to intervene in matters of disclosure/discovery?

A court may only intervene in matters of disclosure/discovery if the arbitral tribunal or any party with the approval of the arbitral tribunal requests from the court assistance in the gathering of evidence. However, the Austrian courts' authority to order the production of documents is very limited and cannot be enforced. Rather, the consequences of a party's failure to produce the documents ordered are limited to negative inferences during the evaluation of evidence.

8.4 What, if any, laws, regulations or professional rules apply to the production of written and/or oral witness testimony? For example, must witnesses be sworn in before the tribunal or is cross-examination allowed?

Austrian arbitration law does not provide for certain rules determining the production of written and/or oral witness testimony. The parties are free to decide upon the procedure. Written and oral witness testimony, as well as cross-examination of witnesses or experts at a hearing is allowed as evidence. Witnesses or experts cannot be sworn by the arbitral tribunal, but only with the assistance of a national court. The professional rules for lawyers admitted to the Austrian Bar require them to refrain from influencing a witness.

8.5 What is the scope of the privilege rules under the law of Austria? For example, do all communications with outside counsel and/or in-house counsel attract privilege? In what circumstances is privilege deemed to have been waived?

Lacking any specific rules, an arbitral tribunal seated in Austria may consider any documents submitted to it by the parties, irrespective of whether such submission was made in violation of a confidentiality obligation or legal privilege. However, in line with international practice, wherever an arbitral tribunal orders the production of documents, legal privileges acknowledged by the law, such as the attorney-client privilege or the doctor-patient privilege, must be observed. No privilege protection is granted to communications between company representatives and their in-house counsel.

9 Making an Award

9.1 What, if any, are the legal requirements of an arbitral award? For example, is there any requirement under the law of Austria that the Award contain reasons or that the arbitrators sign every page?

Pursuant to §606 ACCP, an award must be made in writing and signed by the arbitrators. Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the award must be signed by at least the majority of members of the arbitral tribunal, provided that the obstacle which prevented the missing signature on the award is noted. The award also has to state the date on which it has been rendered and the seat of the arbitral tribunal.

The award has to be reasoned, unless the parties have agreed otherwise. The reference to the parties' respective agreement will suffice only in the case of an award on agreed terms.

10 Challenge of an Award

10.1 On what bases, if any, are parties entitled to challenge an arbitral award made in Austria?

Pursuant to §611 ACCP the arbitral award may be challenged only based on the following grounds:

1. invalid arbitration agreement;
2. violation of the right to be heard;
3. award is beyond the matter in dispute;
4. violation of Austrian arbitration law by the constitution or composition of the arbitral tribunal;
5. violation of the fundamental values of the Austrian legal system by the arbitral procedure (procedural ordre public);
6. fulfilment of requirements for an action for revision;
7. lack of arbitrability of the matter in dispute; and
8. violation of public policy (substantive ordre public).

The grounds stipulated in numbers 7 and 8 above also have to be observed ex officio at all stages of court proceedings.

10.2 Can parties agree to exclude any basis of challenge against an arbitral award that would otherwise apply as a matter of law?

The parties may not waive the right to challenge the arbitral award or any challenge grounds in advance. The grounds stipulated in numbers 7 and 8 above cannot be excluded by an agreement between the parties at all as they concern the public interest.

10.3 Can parties agree to expand the scope of appeal of an arbitral award beyond the grounds available in relevant national laws?

The challenge to set aside an arbitral award is the only recourse against an arbitral award. The list of grounds for the challenge is exhaustive. The parties may not expand the scope of appeal by Austrian national courts.

10.4 What is the procedure for appealing an arbitral award in Austria?

As of 1 January 2014, the action for setting aside an arbitral award must be filed with the Austrian Supreme Court at first and also last instance. The Supreme Court, however, has to apply the same procedural rules as a court of first instance when deciding upon an action for setting aside an award.

11 Enforcement of an Award

11.1 Has Austria signed and/or ratified the New York Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards? Has it entered any reservations? What is the relevant national legislation?

Austria ratified the New York Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (NYC) on May 2, 1961 and the convention entered into force on July 31, 1961. No reservations are currently in place since the initial reservation under Article I(3) of the NYC was withdrawn on February 25, 1988. §614 ACCP explicitly refers to the NYC.

11.2 Has Austria signed and/or ratified any regional Conventions concerning the recognition and enforcement of arbitral awards?

Apart from the NYC, Austria has ratified the following multilateral conventions concerning arbitration: (i) the Geneva Protocol on Arbitration Clauses of 1923; (ii) the Geneva Convention on the Execution of Foreign Arbitral Awards of 1927; and (iii) the European Convention on International Commercial Arbitration of 1961. In addition, Austria has entered into several bilateral agreements concerning the recognition and enforcement of arbitral awards.

11.3 What is the approach of the national courts in Austria towards the recognition and enforcement of arbitration awards in practice? What steps are parties required to take?

In general, Austrian national courts have a positive approach towards the recognition and enforcement of domestic or foreign arbitral awards. In particular, they do not review the merits of the arbitral tribunal decision.

The recognition and enforcement of arbitral awards is governed by the Austrian Enforcement Act (“Exekutionsordnung”). However, where applicable, the NYC overrides most of the domestic provisions. Austrian courts consistently apply the NYC with due consideration of its international character, recognising the need for a unified instrument of recognition and enforcement.

The first step to be taken by a party intending to enforce an award is to apply for declaration of enforcement (“exequatur”). The applicant must provide the court with the original or a duly certified copy of the award and the arbitration agreement. After the declaration of the enforcement has been granted, the party may apply for enforcement authorisation which will lead to the execution of enforcement.

11.4 What is the effect of an arbitration award in terms of res judicata in Austria? Does the fact that certain issues have been finally determined by an arbitral tribunal preclude those issues from being re-heard in a national court and, if so, in what circumstances?

An arbitral award has the effect of a legally binding judgment between the parties. The arbitral award’s finality and enforceability do not differ from those of binding judgments of national courts. As a result, any issues finally determined by an arbitral tribunal are to be considered res iudicata.

11.5 What is the standard for refusing enforcement of an arbitral award on the grounds of public policy?

Refusing enforcement of foreign arbitral awards violating public policy (ordre public) is primarily governed by the NYC. The standard for refusing enforcement of a foreign arbitral award refers to fundamental principles of the Austrian jurisdiction, e.g. the mandatory fundamental principles of the constitution or criminal law. Pursuant to several court decisions, this public policy standard is defined very narrowly.

In practice, objections to enforcement based on this ground are fairly common, but very rarely successful.

12 Confidentiality

12.1 Are arbitral proceedings sited in Austria confidential? In what circumstances, if any, are proceedings not protected by confidentiality? What, if any, law governs confidentiality?

Austrian law does not provide for confidentiality of arbitral proceedings sited in Austria.

In practice, arbitration proceedings are mostly kept confidential. It is generally accepted that arbitrators have to keep the arbitration proceedings confidential. The arbitration rules agreed upon by the parties may contain provisions relating to confidentiality.

However, it is advisable to expressly agree on confidentiality as a part of the document when concluding an arbitration agreement.

12.2 Can information disclosed in arbitral proceedings be referred to and/or relied on in subsequent proceedings?

Unless the parties have agreed otherwise, information disclosed in arbitral proceedings can be referred to and/or relied on in subsequent proceedings. In the context of the challenge proceedings to set aside an arbitral award the public may be excluded from the oral hearings upon request of a party.

13 Remedies / Interests / Costs

13.1 Are there limits on the types of remedies (including damages) that are available in arbitration (e.g., punitive damages)?

Austrian arbitration law does not determine limits on the types of remedies available. However, ordre public has to be considered. Austrian law does not know punitive damages. While there is no applicable case law, in literature it is argued that the concept of punitive damages could violate Austrian public policy.

13.2 What, if any, interest is available, and how is the rate of interest determined?

Under Austrian law, interest is a matter of substantive law. Pursuant to the Austrian Civil Code the interest rate is determined with a basic percentage of 4% per annum and, pursuant to the Austrian Commercial Code, in case of disputes between non-consumers with 9.2% per annum above the base interest rate as published by the Austrian National Bank.

13.3 Are parties entitled to recover fees and/or costs and, if so, on what basis? What is the general practice with regard to shifting fees and costs between the parties?

Pursuant to §609(1) ACCP the arbitral tribunal is legally requested to decide on the duty to reimburse the costs of the proceedings upon termination of the arbitration proceedings, unless otherwise agreed by the parties. The arbitral tribunal has wide discretion in taking into account all the circumstances of the case, in particular the outcome of the proceedings. The arbitral tribunal shall decide on reimbursement only upon request by either party if the proceedings are terminated by entering into a settlement.

There is no general practice. The reimbursement of fees and/or costs is decided in each case depending on the individual circumstances.

13.4 Is an award subject to tax? If so, in what circumstances and on what basis?

An arbitral award is not subject to tax. The Austrian Stamp Duty Act provides for stamp duties on out-of-court settlements recorded in writing. If arbitration proceedings are terminated by entering into a settlement, stamp duty may be imposed pursuant to the Austrian Stamp Duty Act. The stamp duty amounts to 1% of the settlement amount.

13.5 Are there any restrictions on third parties, including lawyers, funding claims under the law of Austria? Are contingency fees legal under the law of Austria? Are there any "professional" funders active in the market, either for litigation or arbitration?

Pursuant to Austrian substantive law contingency fees violate the so-called forbidden pactum de quota litis and are considered invalid/void. The rules of professional conduct for lawyers expressly forbid contingency fees.

Professional funders are active in the Austrian market. However, they are mainly active in court litigation.

14 Investor State Arbitrations

14.1 Has Austria signed and ratified the Washington Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes Between States and Nationals of Other States (1965) (otherwise known as "ICSID")?

Austria signed the Washington Convention on 17 May 1966 and the convention entered into force on 24 June 1971.

14.2 How many Bilateral Investment Treaties (BITs) or other multi-party investment treaties (such as the Energy Charter Treaty) is Austria party to?

Austria is party to 65 BITs, to several multi-lateral investment treaties and the Energy Charter Treaty. Many of Austria's BITs provide for dispute settlement under the auspices of ICSID.

14.3 Does Austria have any noteworthy language that it uses in its investment treaties (for example in relation to "most favoured nation" or exhaustion of local remedies provisions)? If so, what is the intended significance of that language?

Austria has a model BIT which aims at providing a high degree of protection to investors, not only incorporating all typical substantive standards, but also providing for a choice of dispute resolution under the auspices of either ICSID or the ICC, or under the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules. The model BIT addresses, in particular, the issue of transparency in investor-state dispute settlement.

14.4 What is the approach of the national courts in Austria towards the defence of state immunity regarding jurisdiction and execution?

A state that has entered into an arbitration agreement and, thus, has agreed to arbitration proceedings is recognised under Austrian law to have waived the immunity defence. The state is then also deemed to have agreed to potential court proceedings relating to such arbitration. The state's commercial assets are subject to enforcement of arbitral awards.

15 General

15.1 Are there noteworthy trends in or current issues affecting the use of arbitration in Austria (such as pending or proposed legislation)? Are there any trends regarding the type of disputes commonly being referred to arbitration?

There are no noteworthy trends affecting the use of arbitration in Austria.

15.2 What, if any, recent steps have institutions in Austria taken to address current issues in arbitration (such as time and costs)?

By virtue of the Arbitration Law Reform Act 2013, which entered into force on 1 January 2014, the procedure of arbitration governed by the ACCP and the Austrian Stamp Duty Act has changed. The court instances in arbitration matters have been reduced to one instance, concentrating the procedures at the Austrian Supreme Court. This applies to appeals for setting aside an award, as well as for decisions on the validity and existence of an award and procedures regarding the constitution of the arbitral tribunal. Arbitration proceedings involving consumers and labour law matters are still regulated by the former regime and thus may pass three court instances.

The court fee for matters under the jurisdiction of the Austrian Supreme Court is 5% of the value in dispute, with a minimum of EUR 5,253.

On 1 July 2013 the new Vienna Rules 2013 of the Vienna International Arbitral Centre (VIAC) came into force and apply to all proceedings initiated on or after that date.
